How did we get to a point where people are rejecting Moderna so they can wait for Pfizer? Having access to 2 vaccines that both provide incredible protection is a privilege that isn't afforded to many in other countries. So when it's your turn...please take the first one you get!

Good morning & happy Thursday to everyone who knows that mandating vaccines for health workers would protect vulnerable sick patients and any government that doesn't support that is simply pandering to anti-vaxxers. Period. ✌🏾

Good morning & happy Monday to everyone who knows that you can't tell people to "GET vaccinated" & also give people a date when they are no longer required to BE vaccinated.

By ending proof of vaccination on January 17, the Ontario government is undermining our vaccine efforts.

Dr. Kashif Pirzada says Ontario's plan to lift proof of vaccination in January will encourage people to holdout from getting the COVID-19 vaccine until then.

So let me get this straight: Ontario is planning to lift proof of vaccination requirements on January 17th, which means that anti-vaxxers can simply wait it out until January 17th and remain unvaccinated?

Today...the Ontario government announced they will be ending proof of vaccination requirements on January 17th.

And...they also encouraged people to "get vaccinated".

But...why would people feel encouraged to "get vaccinated" if they can just hold off until January 17th?

Who else thinks the Ontario government should implement vaccine mandates for health and education workers TODAY? ✋

The above tweets are quite chilling. Here, we have someone who is angry that Doug Ford announced that proof of vaccination will end in January. The rationale is that if unless people are pressured to get it, they will just "wait it out". This attitude is sick and twisted, yet people like this are allowed to care for vulnerable patients.

This isn't a one-off from someone showing poor judgement. Nor is it some troll being a twit online just for kicks. This man is treated as a medical expert by the establishment.

If a person repeatedly posted comments about pedophilia, would you let them near your children? Of course not. Then why is someone who frequently writes in favour of forced medical procedures allowed such a power as a doctor?

Another day, another look at a doctor on the media circuit. This time, it's McMaster University Professor, Naheed Dosani. Any time an "expert" is all over the news, pushing vaccines and public health measures, it's worthwhile to do a bit of digging. Dosani is quite obviously on board with the "pandemic" agenda. Dosani's Twitter feed is full of social justice issues, mocking the "anti-vaxxers" and retweeting people being called racists.

There is a lot of these comments in Dosani's feed, and it's downright creepy how readily he wants to impose his will on others. He seems to have no real respect for bodily autonomy.

Regarding some of these tweets, Dosani employs a common tactic: he's gaslighting people by claiming if they "wait for the mandates to end, it undermines efforts to force injections". While true, it undermines the validity that these are even necessary.

We obviously can't have people shopping around for a less harmful "vaccine". Things like blood clots, leaking capilaries, Bell's Palsy, or heart inflammation aren't that serious anyway.

Dosani received a Meritorious Service Cross from the Governor General for his work with (PEACH), Palliative Education and Care for the Homeless (PEACH). Apparently this was a model to be replicated in other cities around the world.

On its own, Dosani's work with homeless and vulnerable people seems quite noble and admirable. However, given his obsession with pushing these experimental concoctions, it's fair to ask whether he will be pushing them on those groups he claims to want to help? Will these lead to pressuring people into accepting them? Given his animosity towards people trying to exercise free will, one has to wonder how he behaves with his own patients.

This person has also called for UBI, or a universal basic income, to be implemented. He says that in the long run it's much cheaper for everyone. Kwame McKenzie of the Ontario Science Table, previously was the research chair for the 2017 Ontario pilot project. Strange, if this is just a coincidence.

Dosani received his MD at McMaster University in Hamilton, and he's listed as an Assistant Clinical Professor there. This university has received substantial amounts of money from the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation in recent years.

Kashif Pirzada is another pro-lockdown, pro-vaccine personality who's frequently on the news. He's also a Faculty Member at McMaster, and more information about the school is available. A quick tidbit: McMaster's endowment fund is managed by Blackrock.

In July 2021, Dosani co-authored an opinion piece in the Toronto Star, calling for the mandatory vaccination of healthcare workers. In the article, they comment that workers can use paid sick days to take time off work to recover from the side effects.

Of course, this should not detract in any way from the often repeated talking points that these vaccines are safe and effective. Remember, the correct vaccine for you is the one you're offered first.

Many health workers may not be aware that they can use paid sick days (called the Ontario COVID-19 Worker Income Protection Benefit) to take time off to recover from vaccine side effects. Unfortunately, only three days are available. This means that if a health worker had already taken time off to go get a COVID test, or to look after a family member with COVID-19, they would have no sick days left.

The piece was cloaked in a plea for compassion for marginalized people, and had the same usual social justice talking points. What was noteworthy was that one of the co-authors was Sabina Vohra-Miller. She and her husband, Craig Miller, started the Vohra-Miller Foundation. More background information on them is available here.

VOHRA MILLER FOUNDATION

The Vohra Miller Foundation's extraordinary generosity has enabled the launch of two important public health initiatives at the University of Toronto.

The Institute for Pandemics, which opened in August 2020 at the Dalla Lana School of Public Health, is working to strengthen co-ordination, communication and collaboration between science and government—an approach rooted in evidence-based policies that will support quicker responses to future pandemics.

The Vohra Miller Foundation's investment to launch the Institute for Pandemics was just the start of its extraordinary new partnership with the University. In February 2021, the couple once again made history—for the University of Toronto and for public health in Canada—with a $5-million commitment to help create First Exposure, an innovative new research network and information hub for maternal, reproductive and child health also housed at the Dalla Lana School of Public Health.

The Vohra-Miller Foundation was a major financier of the "Institute for Pandemics", run by the Ontario Science Table, at the Dalla Lana School for Public Health, at the University of Toronto. Dosani himself received training at UofT. His profile still lists him as a lecturer there. Certainly an interesting connection that they know each other.

He was part of a group of researchers that received nearly $1 million from the CIHR on behalf of the University of Victoria to study homelessness, life limiting illness, and vulnerable populations.

Dosani appeared before the Canadian Senate on Bill C-7, to expand MAiD, or medical assistance in dying. He spoke out how many people who consider this only do so since they face many other problems in their lives. It was quite the compelling piece to watch. Of course, will he view that certain medications are needed to maintain a certain quality of life?

Journey Home Hospice, an end-of-life centre for people who are homeless, opened up in 2018, due largely to Dosani's efforts. PEACH was also founded in 2014 by Dosani.

Bit of a side note: until recently, Dosani was a physician at the William Osler Health system. This place previously challenged the VOM or "vaccinate-or-mask" policies. This is basically the opposite of what Dosani supports. Of course, this was in the days when the Ontario Nurses' Association actually stood up for its members.

Dosani's work with homeless people is something (by itself) to commend. However, given his attitude towards mandatory injections, and his connections, where exactly is this heading? Considering that he supports coercing people into taking experimental drugs, does he really have humanity's best interests at heart?
